British control.

These factors contributed to a rising tension in Ireland, leading to the desire for a rebellion.

The Leaders of the Easter Rising

The Easter Rising was planned by a group of leaders who were passionate about Irish independence.

Some of the key figures included:

- Patrick Pearse: A teacher and poet who played a significant role in planning the uprising.
- James Connolly: A socialist leader who believed in fighting for the rights of workers.
- Joseph Plunkett: A young nationalist who was also involved in the planning of the rebellion.
- Tom Clarke: A veteran of earlier nationalist movements who was a key organizer.

These leaders were part of a larger group called the Irish Republican Brotherhood (IRB) and worked together to plan the uprising.

The Plan for the Uprising

The leaders of the Easter Rising had a plan to seize control of key locations in Dublin, the capital of Ireland. They wanted to make a statement about their desire for independence. The plan included:

1. To take over important buildings: The leaders aimed to seize places like the General Post Office (GPO), which they planned to use as their headquarters.
2. To declare an Irish Republic: They intended to announce that Ireland was an independent country.
3. To encourage the Irish people to join the fight: They hoped that by taking action, more people would support their cause.

Despite the risks, the leaders believed that the time had come to act.

The Easter Rising Begins

The Easter Rising began on April 24, 1916, on Easter Monday. Here's what happened during the week-long rebellion:
