

19d osut training schedule

19D OSUT Training Schedule is an essential component of the U.S. Army's training regimen for soldiers assigned to the 19D MOS (Military Occupational Specialty), which specializes in cavalry scouts. The One Station Unit Training (OSUT) format combines both Basic Combat Training (BCT) and Advanced Individual Training (AIT) into a cohesive program designed to prepare soldiers for their specific roles within the cavalry units. Understanding the structure and components of the 19D OSUT training schedule is crucial for recruits, their families, and anyone interested in the Army's training processes. This article will delve into the various aspects of the training schedule, providing an overview of the curriculum, timelines, and essential skills learned throughout the program.

Overview of 19D OSUT

The 19D OSUT program is a comprehensive training path that spans approximately 22 weeks. During this time, soldiers undergo rigorous physical and mental training to prepare them for the demands of their role as cavalry scouts. The training is designed to instill the Army values, develop essential soldiering skills, and equip recruits with the necessary knowledge to perform their duties effectively.

Structure of the Program

The 19D OSUT training schedule consists of two primary phases:

1. Basic Combat Training (BCT) - This initial phase typically lasts around 10 weeks and focuses on foundational military skills.
2. Advanced Individual Training (AIT) - Following BCT, soldiers transition into AIT, which lasts for approximately 12 weeks and concentrates on specialized skills specific to the cavalry scout role.

Key Components of Training

Throughout both BCT and AIT, the training encompasses various essential components, including:

- Physical Fitness: Soldiers participate in daily physical training (PT) sessions to develop strength, endurance, and overall fitness levels.
- Weapons Training: Recruits learn to operate and maintain a variety of weapons systems, including rifles, machine guns, and grenade launchers.
- Land Navigation: Soldiers receive instruction on map reading, compass use, and terrain association to navigate effectively in different environments.

- Tactical Operations: Training includes lessons on reconnaissance, surveillance, and enemy engagement tactics.
- First Aid: Basic medical training is provided to ensure soldiers can administer first aid in combat situations.
- Teamwork and Leadership: Soldiers engage in exercises that promote teamwork, leadership skills, and decision-making under pressure.

Detailed Training Schedule

A typical week during the 19D OSUT training program is structured to maximize efficiency and learning opportunities. Below is a breakdown of what a training week may look like.

Week 1-5: Basic Combat Training Phase

During the first five weeks, the focus is on basic soldiering skills. The training schedule may include:

- Monday to Friday:
 - 0500: Wake-up and physical training (PT)
 - 0630: Breakfast
 - 0730-1200: Classroom instruction (Army values, drill and ceremony)
 - 1200-1300: Lunch
 - 1300-1700: Field training exercises (FTX), including land navigation and basic marksmanship
 - 1700-1800: Evening meal
 - 1800-2100: Continuing education (tactical training, first aid)
- Saturday:
 - 0800-1700: Full-day field exercise (applying skills learned during the week)
- Sunday:
 - Rest and recovery day (optional study sessions)

Week 6-10: Transition to Advanced Individual Training

As the program progresses, soldiers begin to focus more on their specific roles as cavalry scouts:

- Monday to Friday:
 - 0500: Wake-up and physical training (PT)
 - 0630: Breakfast
 - 0730-1200: Advanced classroom instruction (cavalry tactics, reconnaissance techniques)

- 1200-1300: Lunch
 - 1300-1700: Practical exercises (weapons handling, vehicle operations)
 - 1700-1800: Evening meal
 - 1800-2100: Team-building activities and leadership development
- Saturday:
- 0800-1700: Large-scale field training exercise simulating real-world scenarios
- Sunday:
- Rest and recovery day (optional study sessions)

Week 11-22: Advanced Individual Training Phase

The final phase of the 19D OSUT program is dedicated to honing the skills required for the cavalry scout MOS:

- Monday to Friday:
 - 0500: Wake-up and physical training (PT)
 - 0630: Breakfast
 - 0730-1200: Specialized training (vehicle operations, reconnaissance, and surveillance)
 - 1200-1300: Lunch
 - 1300-1700: Simulated missions and tactical operations
 - 1700-1800: Evening meal
 - 1800-2100: After-action reviews and debriefings to assess performance
- Saturday:
 - 0800-1700: Comprehensive field exercise, emphasizing real-world application of skills learned
- Sunday:
 - Rest and recovery day (optional study sessions)

Skills Acquired During 19D OSUT Training

Throughout the duration of the 19D OSUT training schedule, soldiers acquire a multitude of skills that are crucial for their success as cavalry scouts:

1. Reconnaissance Techniques: Learning to gather information about enemy positions, movements, and terrain.
2. Combat Operations: Understanding and executing various combat roles and missions.
3. Vehicle Operations: Gaining proficiency in operating military vehicles, such as the HMMWV (High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle).
4. Communication Skills: Mastering effective communication protocols, both in the field and during operations.

5. Survival Skills: Developing the ability to survive in diverse environments through proper planning and resource management.

Conclusion

The 19D OSUT training schedule is a critical pathway for soldiers aiming to serve as cavalry scouts within the U.S. Army. By integrating both Basic Combat Training and Advanced Individual Training into a single program, recruits gain a comprehensive skill set that prepares them to meet the challenges of their military roles. Through rigorous physical conditioning, specialized instruction, and practical application of learned skills, soldiers emerge from the program ready to contribute effectively to their units. Understanding this training schedule not only helps recruits prepare for their journey but also provides insight into the dedication and commitment required to serve in one of the Army's most dynamic and challenging roles.
