Understanding the AP Psych Practice FRQ Format

The AP Psych practice FRQ section consists of two free-response questions that students must complete within a limited time frame. Each question typically requires analyzing psychological concepts, applying theories, and interpreting scenarios related to various domains of psychology. The FRQs assess students' ability to construct coherent, well-organized responses supported by relevant evidence and terminology. The questions often involve multiple parts, such as defining terms, explaining relationships, and evaluating experimental results.

Structure of AP Psych FRQs

Each AP Psych practice FRQ usually contains two parts, labeled as (a) and (b), with some questions including a third part (c). The responses must address all parts to demonstrate comprehensive understanding. Part (a) often asks for definitions or explanations of psychological concepts. Part (b) typically requires application or analysis of these concepts in a specific context. Part (c), if present, may involve evaluating or comparing theories or experimental designs.

Time Management During the FRQ Section

Students are allocated 50 minutes to complete the two free-response questions, which means approximately 25 minutes per question. Efficient time management is crucial to ensure thorough answers without sacrificing clarity or detail. Practicing under timed conditions helps students develop pacing strategies and reduces anxiety during the actual exam.
