Overview of Atlanta Braves Spring Training

Atlanta Braves spring training is an annual event held before the regular Major League Baseball season begins. It allows the team to prepare physically and strategically while giving fans an intimate opportunity to see players up close in a more relaxed environment. The Braves conduct their spring training in Florida, where the warm climate facilitates outdoor practice and games during late winter and early spring. These sessions typically run from late February through March, culminating just before the regular season opener.

Spring training games are part of the Grapefruit League, where the Braves compete against other MLB teams also training in Florida. This period is crucial for players to showcase their skills, earn roster spots, and build team chemistry. For attendees, it is a chance to witness emerging talent and enjoy a more casual and affordable baseball experience compared to regular-season games.
