- Russell Wilson (QB): After a challenging first season with the team, Wilson is under immense pressure to show improvement. His performance at training camp will be closely monitored as he works to regain his Pro Bowl form.
- Javonte Williams (RB): Coming off an injury, Williams' recovery and performance will be critical for the Broncos' running game. His ability to break tackles and contribute in the passing game makes him a player to watch.
- Courtland Sutton (WR) and Jerry Jeudy (WR): Both receivers have the potential to be game-changers. Their rapport with Wilson during camp could dictate the effectiveness of the passing game.

New Acquisitions and Their Roles

Each offseason, the Broncos look to strengthen their roster through trades, free agency, and the draft. This year, several new faces have joined the team, each bringing unique skills and experience:

1. Vance Joseph (Defensive Coordinator): A familiar face returning to the Broncos, Joseph's defensive schemes will play a crucial role in maximizing the talent on the roster.

The Importance of Competition

Training camp serves as a competitive environment where players must prove their worth. Each position battles can lead to surprising outcomes, with some veteran players potentially losing their spot to hungry rookies or undrafted free agents. Here are some areas of competition to watch:

- Quarterback Battle: While Wilson is the presumed starter, any slip-ups may open the door for backup options to showcase their abilities.

- Wide Receiver Group: With several young receivers vying for playing time, camp will determine who earns the crucial WR3 position.
- Defensive Line Rotation: The depth chart will be determined by performance in drills and scrimmages, as the Broncos seek to solidify their pass rush.
