The Senate is made up of 100 members, with each state represented by two senators, regardless of its population size. Senators serve six-year terms, and elections are staggered so that approximately one-third of the Senate is up for election every two years.

Key responsibilities of the Senate include:

- Confirming Presidential Appointments: The Senate has the authority to confirm or reject presidential nominees for federal positions, including Cabinet members, ambassadors, and federal judges.
- Ratifying Treaties: International treaties negotiated by the President must be ratified by a two-thirds majority in the Senate.
- Conducting Impeachment Trials: The Senate has the sole power to conduct trials for impeached officials, including the President.

The House of Representatives

The House of Representatives is comprised of 435 members, with the number from each state determined by its population. Representatives serve two-year terms, and all members are up for re-election every election cycle.

Key responsibilities of the House include:

- Initiating Revenue Bills: The Constitution mandates that all bills related to taxation and revenue must originate in the House.

- Impeachment Powers: The House has the authority to impeach federal officials by a majority vote, sending the case to the Senate for trial.
- Representing the People: House members directly represent their constituents, making their role crucial in responding to the needs and concerns of the public.

Functions of Congress

Understanding the functions of Congress is essential for grasping how the legislative branch operates. Congress has several key functions, including:

Legislation

The primary role of Congress is to create laws. This process involves several steps:

3. Floor Debate: After committee approval, the bill is debated on the floor of the House or Senate, where further amendments may be proposed.
4. Voting: Members vote on the bill, and if it passes both chambers, it is sent to the President for approval or veto.

Representation

Members of Congress are elected to represent the interests of their constituents. This representation can take many forms:

- Advocating for Local Issues: Congress members often advocate for policies and funding that benefit their districts or states.
- Constituent Services: They assist constituents with various issues, including navigating federal agencies and addressing concerns related to government services.

Oversight

Congress has the responsibility to oversee the executive branch and ensure that laws are implemented effectively. This oversight function includes:
