Identity and Humanity

The question of what it means to be human is central to "Child of God." McCarthy explores the idea that identity is shaped not only by societal acceptance but also by individual choices:

- Loss of Humanity: Lester's actions lead him to a point where he is no longer recognized as human by the community. His descent into savagery prompts readers to question the nature of humanity itself.
- Existential Reflection: The novel prompts readers to consider their own identities and the societal constructs that define them.
