Identity and Self

One of the central themes of "Despair" is the exploration of identity. Hermann's obsession with his doppelgänger serves as a metaphor for the fragmented self. This theme resonates with Nabokov's broader literary concerns, as he often employs unreliable narrators and intricate plots to evoke uncertainty.

Despair and Alienation

The title itself encapsulates the pervasive sense of despair that permeates the narrative. Hermann's feelings of alienation are not only personal but also reflective of a broader existential crisis faced by individuals in modern society. His quest for meaning amid chaos highlights the psychological struggles that accompany isolation.
